DETAILED ACTION

Response to Arguments

Applicant's arguments with respect to claims 1 to 9, 19 and 20 have been considered but are most in view of the new ground(s) of rejection.

Specification

The disclosure is objected to because of the following informalities: Last 4 lines of paragraph 25 on page 13 discloses that alloys C1, C5 and C6 are within the accepted ranges for the Custom 450 alloy as disclosed in US Patent 3,574,601. This appears to be incorrect because C1, C5 and C6 contain Nb (same as Cb) at more than 10x%C yet claim 1 of US Patent '601 recites Nb to be present at up to 10x %C.

Appropriate correction is required.

Claim Rejections - 35 USC § 103

The following is a quotation of 35 U.S.C. 103(a) which forms the basis for all obviousness rejections set forth in this Office action:

(a) A patent may not be obtained though the invention is not identically disclosed or described as set forth in section 102 of this title, if the differences between the subject matter sought to be patented and the prior art are such that the subject matter as a whole would have been obvious at the time the invention was made to a person having ordinary skill in the art to which said subject matter pertains. Patentability shall not be negatived by the manner in which the invention was made.

Claims 1 to 7, and 19 and 20 are rejected under 35 U.S.C. 103(a) as being unpatentable over the publications of Carpenter Custom 450, Henthorne, or Bridge et al., which were submitted by applicant.

Carpenter Custom 450 publication on page 1 discloses the type analysis 450 steel having a composition with alloying constituents whose wt% ranges overlap those recited by the claims; such overlap renders applicant's composition prima facie obvious despite differences in non-overlapping areas, see In re Malagari, 182USPQ549 and MPEP2144.05. To distinguish claims over prior art, applicant needs to demonstrate (e.g. by comparative test data that the more narrowly claimed ranges are somehow critical and productive of new and unexpected results. Also note on page 6 wherein given the right conditions, the Custom 450 alloy can possess a tensile strength of greater than 1200Mpa.

Henthorne discloses specific heat nos. 1,3 and 4 representative of the custom 450 steel in Table 1 on page 53/14 which meet the claimed composition except for the uncertainty of the Nb content. Note that the Henthorne publication copy submitted by applicant has been poorly copied and the Nb contents aren't shown. It would be greatly appreciate if applicant could provide another copy of Table 1 to provide clarity with regard to the Nb amounts. In any event, the prior art Nb range is present in an amount of at least 8x%C as evident by the Carpenter 450 publication; and hence would encompass applicant's claimed Nb range of (10 to 20) x %C.

Bridge et al. In Table 1 on page 280 disclose a 450 steel alloy composition which meets the claimed composition except for a slightly higher amount of Nb (Cb). Since applicant has not demonstrated criticality of the Nb range (e.g. by comparative test data), then it would seem that a composition with 0.64% Nb vs. a composition with slightly more (say 0.68%) would depict a mere difference in the proportion of element without any attendant unexpected results, which would not patentably distinguish claims over prior art. Moreover, note tables II and III on page 280 and 281 wherein depending on the specific age hardening treatment, the 450 steel can obtain a tensile strength of 175Ksi(1200Mpa) or more and fracture energy of 60 to 102 ft-lbs.

In regard to applicant's specification in Table 3 on page 12, the comparative test alloys C1, C5 and C6 contain lower amounts of C then the prior art alloys and hence would not be a valid comparison to distinguish claims over prior art.

Even though prior art does not discloses a grain size of ASTM #5 or higher as recited by the claim 6, such would be expected since compositional limitations are met and in absence of proof to the contrary.

Moreover, the prior art discloses a steel having a martensite microstructure and therefore contains no delta ferrite and hence would satisfy claim 19.

Allowable Subject Matter

Claims 8 and 9 are allowed.

The following is a statement of reasons for the indication of allowable subject matter: The art of record does not teach or fairly suggest a steam turbine component formed of a precipitation-hardened stainless steel alloy composition, as claimed, having an ultimate tensile strength of at least 1275MPa together with a Charpy impact toughness of at least 80 Joules, and has been tempered at a temperature of about 480 to 500C.
